A Poem from a Foreign Guerilla

Disyembre 6, 2022

The bright light of the moon reflects on my face, revealing Tisay
Contrasting the dark charcoal-soiled hands of Tatay
The rivers, mountains, and paths we cross to meet
Resemble the grooves on the masa's palms when we greet
Beads of sweat roll down my chin to the seeds planted beneath my feet
Where the flowers bloom to kiss my feverish cheeks
I may not fully understand the language of those we wholly serve
But here I am answering the call to arms
Carried in the winds
Through the tubuhan and palay fields,
Construction sites trampled by burnt rubber wheels,
And to overseas workers and wage laborers

Here we are
To guide the oppressed masses through revolutionary struggle and necessary hardship
To harness the strength of 7,107 islands united
To wield the forged hammer and the sharp sickle of the toiling masses against the cold-hearted ruling class
The demise of the common enemy of the peoples of the world is the only history guaranteed
And when the warm red sun rises across timezones for the people to bask in its glory

Tagumpay need not be translated.
